Describe this invention in your own words.:
in response to determining that both the first criteria and the second criteria are not met, executing a spam filter on the received email message, wherein the first criteria specifies that the received email message is from a given Internet domain and the second criteria specifies that the sender of the received email message is currently present at an instant messaging account.

A spam filter is run when the sender of an email message is not currently present at an IM accout and the email is not from a given internet domain. I haven't see anyone running spam filters due to the sender is not active on an IM (login to an IM account or chatting with others), not to mention the combination.
